

On media ownership. It seems less than 10 conglomerates control the following: 1. financing the making of the art/media, 2. manufacturing of the art/media, 3. Distribution of the art/media, 4. Review of their own art/media. And diversity - anything outside of these companies control - is lost. The FCC should limit the corporate control to only one of the 4. To control all 4 factors listed above should be considered a monopoly. I would suggest that the FCC go the other way and insure that certain space on the radio dial is set aside for community radio that is non-profit, and must be mostly about that community.
